Theory of Change

the food group

Twin Cities Mobile Market

Fare for All

Anti-Hunger

Public and political will that:
- everyone deserves access to food
- supports & values fresh, local food and farming
- people in power engage in equity work

- People have knowledge of existing food resources
- People have skills for available, living wage jobs
- Equitable distribution of resources

Advocacy

Nutritious and culturally relevant foods

- Affordable retail options in every community
- Dignified distribution of free food in every community
- Routes between food & people
- People have money to pay for the food they want
- People have time and skills to prepare whole foods
- Fully funded social safety net programs
- Good food is subsidized more than processed foods
- Community members can grow food

Nutritious and culturally relevant foods

Accessible & affordable food

LONG TERM OUTCOME:

A just & equitable food system* for local consumers, farmers, makers of local products, and small retailers

- Environmentally sustainable and humane policy and practices
- Equitable access to capital
- Affordable and available land and equipment
- Reliable markets for farmers

Sustainable Farming

Sustainable Farming

- Emerging farmers have skills and knowledge to farm in Minnesota's climate
- Soil health improvements ensure food for the future
- Economically viable farming
- Safety net for local food producers

Advocacy

Sustainable & local food production

so that (repeated throughout)

- Equity is core to our mission because where we live, how much money we make, or the color of our skin currently influences access to healthy and culturally-appropriate foods.
- Racism is a root cause for an inequitable and unjust food system; we engage in food justice and anti-racism work.
- We value community voice and engagement.

- Policy change at all levels is necessary to accomplish our goals.
- Good economic development strengthens local food systems and local food systems strengthens the local economy.
- Food is too valuable to be wasted.
- We engage in partnerships and with volunteers to accomplish our work.